INDIA

sonable period must be at the very center of planned development," and again that "in the circumstances of the country, family planning has to be undertaken not merely as a major development of program but as a nationwide movement which embodies a basic attitude towards a better life for the individual, the family, and the country." The allocation of funds shows the top priority nature of the program; the funds have increased from $1.47 million in the first plan to $6.30 million in the second and to $56.7 million in the third, with a possibility of extending it to $105 million.

Other areas holding government attention and in no way less important are nutrition, maternal and child health, mental health, improvement in collection of vital statistics, drug control and food adulteration, and promotion of research in indigenous systems of medicine (ayurveda, unani, homeopathy, and nature cure).

Although statistics show considerable progress in health, there are marked gaps which become obvious when the resources and facilities for health care are analyzed. In relation to needs the institutional facilities are quite inadequate, more so in rural areas, where the need is greater. Doctors also are unevenly distributed and again the shortages are mainly in the rural areas. Shortages of trained personnel, supplies and equipment have in instances been major barriers in control of communicable diseases. The persistence of intestinal diseases as a major public health problem is explained by the lack of safe water supply and proper sewage disposal. These problems are further exaggerated because of the rapid population growth. Although there has been a 22 per cent rise in national income since 1949 the per capita income has remained about the same (an annual increase of only $.10 from 1949 to 1959).

In 1959 the government appointed the Mudaliar Committee to evaluate the health programs in the country and to make recommendations. The Committee submitted its report in 1961 and this is currently being reviewed.

The aim of the government to provide a good life for the 400 million people of India remains unshaken, and the achievement of this goal, though far off, is seen as a reality. The planning experience of the last ten years and the large social and economic changes that have already taken place have brought a conviction that India can look forward to sustained progress.
